

6 Reasons Why You Should Close Your Office on Election Day or Advocate For Your Company to Do So.

1

Many employees feel uncomfortable disrupting the work day to go vote.

2

Closing offices will encourage civic engagement and positively impacts company culture and identity.

3

Many employees do not designate enough time to get to the polls before or after work. Work is cited as the number one reason why Americans don't make it to the polls.

4

There will be minimal loss of productivity with this commitment, and employees will likely be incentivized to make up the difference.

5

Closing offices influences other business leaders to follow suit.

6

Employees will have proper time to read about candidates and measures on the ballot, better equipping them to participate in the voting process.
